

The Bristol and West Progressive Jewish Congregation FUNERAL GUIDE

This leaflet has been prepared to explain our customary arrangements to our members and to encourage them to ensure their families have clear directions to follow when a loved one's life has ended. Everyone is strongly advised to make clear their wishes in both their will and with their next of kin.

BEFORE THE FUNERAL

Instructions in a will

Decisions around funerals can be very difficult for families during their time of grief, even more so if they have not been made aware of their loved one's wishes. Putting instructions in your will is the best way to make your wishes clear.

Organising a funeral

The funeral is organised by a funeral director, appointed and paid for by the family, in liaison with our Rabbi or designated contact in the community. You can find local funeral directors on yell.com or other internet search, or by looking in the yellow pages. Our congregation does not have a preferred funeral director.

The service leader and funeral director will liaise to arrange a convenient date and time. The Rabbi will organise the service, working together with the family to reconcile their needs with Jewish tradition, teaching and the congregational minhag; and will help compose the eulogy if the family wishes, and support the bereaved. Bristol and West Progressive Jewish Congregation can organise burial and cremation.

Cemeteries

The Synagogue conducts funerals in several cemeteries in the region. There are a few designated spaces in North Bristol at Canford and many more in South Bristol at Bedminster Down. Each of these includes a crematorium. In addition, there is a Woodlands cemetery in the beautiful Gloucestershire countryside. We can also conduct funerals in other cemeteries anywhere in the region. It is possible to buy a plot before your death.

Partners

A grave in any burial ground is consecrated as Jewish by the funeral service held there. Subject to available space, all partners whether Jewish or not can be buried either together or as near as possible to each other. It is important to make this clear before your death.

Timing

It is traditional in Judaism for funerals to take place immediately after death. There is no requirement for this and it has become customary for there to be a gap of a few days. A small interval may make it much easier for arrangements to be made, and for mourners who live some distance away to attend.

Costs

Funeral costs can mount up. You may wish to make some provision in advance, and that could include buying a plot. There are funeral directors' fees, and charges made by the cemetery or crematorium; later—if appropriate—a memorial stone. All our members will receive the full services of the service leader without additional charge. This will include preparing and leading the funeral service, home visits and prayers on the same evening at home. For non-members, we ask for the equivalent of two years' membership fees (details available on request).

AT THE FUNERAL

Service

There is a standard, fairly short funeral service provided by Liberal Judaism. Although Jewish funerals are traditionally unaccompanied by music, it's important for us to be able to create a service that will be meaningful for the family. You should feel free to ask for whatever is going to make the funeral feel right for you and the other mourners.

The rabbi (or whomever else is leading the service) will be happy to help you decide the form of service.

You can ask the person leading the service or someone else to give a eulogy and suggest the kind of things that the family would like remembered in this.

AFTER THE FUNERAL

Prayers/Shivah

The seven-day period of mourning, known as shivah, begins on the day of the funeral and ends on the morning of the seventh day. It is unusual for members of our community to hold a formal shivah for seven days, but that can be arranged if requested. If requested, a service can be held at the home of the bereaved in the evening of the day of the funeral, or later in the week. Some of our members also choose to have prayers at the Synagogue.

Stone setting or memorial

Some ten or eleven months after a burial, a matzeivah, or memorial stone, is erected and a service of consecration held. The Rabbi can assist with traditional Hebrew wording to add to the English inscription.

Remembrance Prayers

These can be read if family members wish in the Synagogue on the Shabbat before the anniversary of death (yahrzeit). It is up to members whether they would prefer this linked to the Jewish or secular calendar date. Names can be read out during the Yom Kippur yizkor (memorial) service either in addition to or instead of being read out at a Shabbat service.
